ABOUT COLUMBIA

Many people choose to live in Columbia because of its central location between the cities of Baltimore and Washington, DC and easy access to three international airports via a number of major roadways. Others choose it because of Columbia Association, an integral part of Columbia since its inception, which provides myriad opportunities for sports, fitness and recreation. And yet others are attracted to Columbia because of its founder's ideals and commitment to diversity, which are still clearly evident and make Columbia more racially diverse than America as a whole.

For the last ten years, Columbia has been ranked in the top 10 places to live. Columbia is home to The Mall in Columbia (196 stores, centrally located in Town Center) and 10 different villages and village centers, each having a unique look and identity. Also contributing to Columbia's high ranking is its location within Howard County, which provides award-winning education and library systems for residents.
